??? How did you get into fantasy?

I didn't always love reading. I mean, my favorite book growing up (and to this day) is A Wrinkle in Time, but I didn't have a love for reading at all. When I reached the seventh grade we had to read books. She didn't care what books we read, they could be mystery, they could be horror, they could have elves and dwarves in them. She didn't care. The teacher had a lot of free fantasy books for teens in her classroom library, and once I found those, I was hooked. Oh, and did I mention the perk: dark fantasy free? I may have mentioned that.

??? Who should read this book?

I know a lot of adults read young adult, and that's awesome. I never pictured my free fantasy books for teens, but it works out just as well. There's nothing too graphic in my book, and while there's a tiny bit of swearing, I've read much worse. The real audience I was going for are those women out there who love dark fantasy and elves and dwarves. I find I have a lot in common with women my age, and my characters are typically of the female variety and just starting out in life, so that works. Honestly, these books could work for anyone, that's why the dark fantasy free promotion, so anyone can grab it and see if it fits for them.

??? Are there any authors who've shaped your writing?

Oh yea, those free fantasy books for teens I mentioned? They were David Eddings, Mercedes Lackey, and the Dragonlance series. I got lost in those pages, reading of wizards, elves and dwarves as well as all the magic and monsters! Mercedes Lackey really helped me through my teen years, struggling to accept myself as a young gay man. If it wasn't for her works, things might have been very different for me. I found her just when I needed to. I also had a friend who loved fantasy so, once again YAY dark fantasy free! Can you see how much I love free?
