Two teams of gameshow competitors are sent back in time to the twelfth century. They arrive just as Norman knights, led by Strongbow, begin the invasion of Ireland. But one cannot be there and have no impact. Their presence changes history.

FLY ON THE WALL is a time-travel gameshow that transports two competing teams to 12th century Ireland where they must complete a series of challenges devised by the show.

The story is set against major events in Ireland and England, starting with the Anglo-Norman invasion of Ireland and the arrival of King Henry II of England. It covers the life and death of a renowned Norman knight called Strongbow before moving to more modern times.

The teams land on a beach just as Norman ships, full of knights, crossbowmen, mercenaries and horses arrive to begin the conquest of Ireland.

The book focuses on the relationships between the contestants and the invaders as they compete against each other to win their ultimate prize: money, land, their lives and futures.

The competitors' motivations, failings and preferences cause unexpected twists. Not all of them will survive.

Norman strategy, risk-taking and organisation are complex but so too are the machinations of the media executives who run the show, some of whom are motivated by more than their bonuses.

And the contestants cannot be there in the past and have no effect - their presence changes events in history.
