James Stilton Fredricks III is the 22-year-old heir to the Fredricks fortune, one of the richest in the region. Having squandered the inheritance that he received when he turned eighteen, “barely only six figures left”, he is dependent upon his grandmother, Helen, his sole living relative, for support until she passes and leaves him with the bulk of the estate. Pampered and spoiled for most of his life, things are good for James. He does what he wants, uses the household staff (especially the female household staff--the latest being a cute little Persian girl named Shari, the upstairs maid) for his own pleasure, and relies on his name and the family wealth to keep him out of trouble. Life is good, that is, until Nurse Victoria moves into the manor to provide full time care for Helen and takes the disciplining of James on as an additional duty. Victoria is an auburn haired beauty in her thirties, taller than James and physically fit with a taught waist and a pleasing swell to hips and breasts. At Helen’s direction (and private delight) James is taken over Victoria’s lap for a bare bottomed spanking with her large, heavy ebony hairbrush. Helen and Victoria forbid James from further harassment or disrespect of the household staff (especially Shari) and back this edict up with spankings and paddlings. At Helen’s bidding, even the cook and her 18-year-old daughter contribute to the young man’s humiliation and correction. Victoria instructs Shari in the disciplining of James, who agrees to submit to weekly sessions over her petite knees in atonement for past sins. Shari’s small stature and inexperience work against her, however, until “Aunt Ethel”, Helen’s 80-year-old private secretary steps in to provide help and instruction. Under the strict and persistent lessons provided by this mansion full of women, James gradually sees the error in his former spoiled ways; he marries Shari, and becomes in every way a dutiful and considerate husband, with nothing but praise and kind words for every member of the household staff (especially its female members).
